

If you are thinking about starting to make your business better, if you're looking for an efficient way to increase your company's profits, or just if you're curious about what entrepreneurs talk about in the boardrooms, then try listening to what Michael Hammer and James Champy have to say. They offer invaluable insights into their experiences with corporate training that will help you transform your business. This is one of the best books by these two professionals on this topic. Michael Hammer is an author who has spent decades researching how businesses can be transformed so that they can take advantage of opportunities in a complex and competitive world. His approach to business is based on the belief that great companies are born of their human capital. He wants everyone to be aware of the importance of people in building a business, and that they are central to the strategic efforts of the company. James Champy is a lawyer, author, consultant and entrepreneur who has also worked with firms around the world. His approach is based on how people can manage their business effectively. He wants people who want to start or improve their businesses to learn more about his model of re-engineering. In his book, he explains the concept of "win-win" and how it can improve the productivity and the profits of a business. The book offers a detailed look at how companies suffer from "Excellence Fever" and how they continue to be obsessed with performance and efficiency. They want to make their company better by implementing new methods and strategies that will improve their efficiency. It's true that companies must always be open to change; employees should always be prepared to change with it. However, this obsession with efficiency leads people to forget about the human aspect of work, which is often ignored in favor of more objective measurements like revenues and profits. In "Shake Up Your Company!" Hammer and Champy explain how they were able to create a new company from the ground up. Their belief was that a business could increase its profitability by improving the way it markets its products, by producing innovation and by using information technology. Hammer and Champy have been leaders in the field of science and science-based management for many years. They help to guide current business professionals in their work. They explain why people should create processes that are based on the needs of the "people side" of things—the human relationships, the creativity and the work processes. They show how business managers can use their skills to solve lifelong problems through their efforts. These include issues like managing innovation, transforming companies, improving teamwork, dealing with complexity and developing new ways for organizations to function. At times it can be very difficult for managers to find time for this kind of work because they are so busy with their own jobs that they spend too much time looking to others for solutions.
